DESCRIPTION:

in Polonia Journal no 19, we want to devote attention to the topics of uncertainty and anxiety in the political, cultural and social areas in the contemporary times. Since the time of ancient Greece up to our turbulent present, the world has been involved in ideological and religious disputes ending in military conflicts with annoying frequency and regularity. Let us reconsider the history of Europe, the continent full of racial, religious and social prejudices, which has been slow to emerge from the state of political and cultural chaos ever since.

To this end, the philosophical thought of ancient Greece and Enlightenment, for instance, could help in tracing the culture-formative logical discourse which led us to the creation of evocative account of democracy and law. Unfortunately, the latter have not been able to provide a clear-cut mark to the Good and the Bad. These ideas have been frequently reinterpreted depending on the intentions of the interpreters. Nevertheless, they still serve as indicators of the imaginary ideals human beings want to live by.

All the proposed topics mentioned above are interconnected and form an interlaced network requiring in-depth debate. We can only hope that the submitted essays will dispel some of our doubts and provide good arguments for harmony and peace in these difficult times.
